

ADVERTISE MORE IS LECTURER'S ADVICE

Granville Jones, Noted Humorist, Drops Hint to Ad Club in Spreading Fame of the Magic City.

SAYS TULSA "WONDERFUL"

People Know It As Money Center, But How About Homes, Churches and Social Life?

Jones is a very commonplace name. In this case it can be prefixed by one word—Granville—as a name it immediately loses its place in the list of common names.

When a World reporter knocked on the door of room 402 Hotel Tulsa yesterday afternoon, he was greeted with a hearty "hello," and "come on in."

Inside was Granville Jones, noted humorist and chautauque lecturer. After shaking hands, Mr. Jones waved the reporter to a chair while he himself went to the door and shut it.

"I am trying to thread this shoe," explained the great humorist. "You see I always forget to have new shoes. I put in my shoes when I am in a tight place—at least I did forget. I was looking through my trunk while ago for some papers and came across this pair of shoes. I had in my shoes, decided I needed new ones and the rest of the story you may watch."

And Granville continued to insert the laces.

"There is no question but that Tulsa is a wonderful city. This is my third visit here. I know this must be a great financial center. When I first came to Tulsa about three years ago the city was embroiled in a vice campaign. I can't truthfully say that I liked it then. All I read about in the papers was vice, vice, vice."

The vice may have been here, I don't know. The next time I came here I was shown over the city. I saw your fine residential sections and your splendid churches. I liked Tulsa much more."

And then in referring to his present short stay in Tulsa Mr. Jones recalled the Ad club.

"I wanted to say to the Ad club this morning, but didn't have time. That in advertising Tulsa, they should forget for a while the financial side. Everybody in America knows Tulsa by its money. But I am afraid that the money is small when you start counting them who know it by its civic and social life. Please by this time fine homes, fine schools, fine churches, in fact your whole social life.

"People who have made all of the money here and add to the city are looking for a place to live and to live in—our city and make money."

"You have these things here of course, improvements can be made. But I would say to the Ad club to advertise them. You have the homes, the churches, the schools and the fine social life. But judging from my own observations there is no one thing to sell them."

ued at $25 from a freight car, with out consent of the complainant.

Abandons Plan to Trail Wilson It Is Announced Following Address Given at Des Moines.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Sept. 16. — Senator William E. Borah of Idaho has been compelled to abandon his plan to follow the president speaking tour and today is en route to Washington in response to an urgent request from Senator Lodge, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee.

Senator Borah was to have appeared here last night with Senator Hiram Johnson of California, but on receipt of Lodge's message returned to Washington, direct from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he spoke Sunday instead of in Waterloo, as had previously been planned.

Senator Johnson, speaking here last night, devoted the greater part of his address to discussion of sending American troops into Siberia. He declared that Bolshevism is "bred in the hearts of the women whose sons enlisted or were drafted to fight a war with Germany and who have been shut down in Siberia."

When a total merchant of Tulsa sold $1 worth of goods, some of the dollar goes to the manufacturer who made the goods, some to the railroads that carried the merchandise here and the rest stays here in Tulsa. The portion that remains here goes out of the merchant's bank account, mostly in his sales expense, and for light rent and other costs of doing business and this portion of the dollar thus becomes an immediate community asset. The merchant keeps a small percentage for his net profit, and this too stays here and therefore benefits the community.

If there could be some way of making twice as many dollars come to Tulsa, twice as much would be passed around among the people of Tulsa, helping everybody, says Arlie J. Cripe, president of Tulsa Advertising club.
